

IDAHO'S NEW STATE HOUSE

Will be the Finest in All the West.

WILL COST $1,000,000

FIFTH BEST CAPITOL BUILDING IN THE UNITED STATES.

Idaho will have the distinction of having the finest capitol in the entire Pacific northwest. Montana has to date the newest and most expensive of capitol of the Pacific northwest, but her capitol was erected at a total appropriation of money and land cost of about $350,000. Idaho, with estimated to be worth $1,000,000, will not be troubled for lack of funds. This amount ranking fifth in the amount appropriated for the cost of the capitol of the entire country.

The Capitol commission, in selecting plans, spared neither time nor expense to procure the best talent of the country from which to select their architect, advertising in the principal architectural journals and inviting competitive plans for the capitol. Fourteen architects responded, which architects were scattered from the principal cities of the country from New York to Seattle. The board gave each architect competing two hours in which to explain drawings submitted by him, or his firm, and after listening to all of them, and giving about two weeks of earnest study to the various plans, gradually cutting out one by one the ones possessing the least merit, finally cutting down the number to two designs, one by Perry & Clas of Milwaukee, and one by J. E. Tourtelotte & Co. of Boise. The board could not decide as to which of the two designs remaining were the most meritorious, and decided to settle the matter by taking a vote, the result of said vote being two votes in favor of Perry & Clas and three in favor of Tourtelotte & Co., thus awarding Tourtelotte & Co. first prize and the contract for preparing the plans.

Mr. Tourtelotte, of the successful firm, being in the northern part of the state at the state university, and having heard much of the coming metropolis of north Idaho, decided to drop down to Lewiston yesterday to verify the reports he had heard concerning our city.

When seen by a reporter last evening he gave the following description above, and said further: "The capitol building will be located on two blocks of ground in the heart of Boise, at the old capitol site. Excavating commenced on Monday of this week. The capitol is 380 feet in length over all, by 220 feet in width, and the above figures inclusive of steps; the building will be four stories in height, with a grand, imposing and monumental portico one story higher, to emphasize the main entrance. There will be a basement under the entire structure. The grade story is strictly an office story, with four entrances from the four points of the compass. The said story, in addition to offices, will contain a large and well equipped armory, historical room, and a large lecture hall, room for a permanent exhibit of the resources of Idaho. The story above this is the principal or executive floor. On this floor will be situated the suites of the governor, secretary of state, attorney general, treasurer, auditor, superintendent of education, and judges court room, clerk of court, and judges chamber. This story will have four entrances from the four street sides, with broad granite steps leading up thereto, the main entrance steps being 80 feet wide at the bottom. The third, or legislative floor, will contain the house of representatives, the senate chamber. For the use of the house and senate and convenient thereto, are the clerks' rooms, committee rooms, clerks' rooms, etc.

"The house and senate are semi-circular in shape and are located in the extreme ends of the building, and are 60x45 and 60x35 feet respectively. The house has a capacity of 150 members, and the senate a capacity of 60 members. The ceilings of the house and senate are circular, and they are surmounted by a dome-shaped roof, which roof is of metal construction with large opaque glass panels, thus lighting the chambers with the ideal light for rooms of this character. The ceiling portions of the rooms being circular, affords an ideal balcony on one side of each chamber for the use of interested spectators, there being no columns between the spectators and floor of the chamber. The senate is enclosed with a colonnade of Corinthian columns and entablature, while the house is enclosed with a colonnade of Ionic columns and entablature. The fourth, or balcony floor, will be fitted up exclusively for the entertainment of the people, public and guests of the house and senate.

"The exterior will be built of local sandstone, quarried within two miles of the capitol site by convicts, thus saving the state this one of the principal items of cost in the construction of this kind. This sandstone is considered to be the finest in the United States by experts. The main entrance is grand and imposing, the columns 44 feet in length, supporting the upper portion of the portico. From the portico you enter an elegant vestibule, from which you are ushered into one of the loftiest rotundas in the country. This rotunda is enclosed with huge Corinthian columns six feet in diameter and sixty feet high, which support the upper portion of the dome. It will be 150 feet from the floor of the rotunda to the ceiling of the same.

The dome is of elegant design and is about 200 feet in height. All of the building will be of stone, and roofed with asphalt for the main part, while the dome will be covered with copper which in turn will be covered with gold leaf. The building will be absolutely fire proof throughout. The floors, wainscoting, staircases, columns, capitals and all interior work of an ornamental type will be of Italian marble and the doors and what little woodwork is absolutely necessary will be of mahogany.

The architect explained to the reporter that the cost of the building was not always a fair index as to its appearance, as many expensive buildings were failures, whereas some of the simplest buildings were examples of architectural perfection and beauty. The citizens who have been interested in architecture of Idaho have compared the photograph of the proposed capitol with the photographs of other state capitol, have without a single exception pronounced it the most pleasing of them all, there being harmony, balance of the parts, and a room, which points in total are possessed by few. Idaho will be proud of her capitol, it standing among the capitol as an index to the confidence of her citizens in her future in having the enterprise to build a capitol grand enough for the largest and finest state in the union, beautiful enough to satisfy a commonwealth of artists, convenient enough in its plan and arrangement to completely satisfy in state a true American, the peers in this respect to all peoples of the earth, and to which America owes in part her present greatness, and built of materials durable enough to satisfy a community composed of saints, who expect to live forever, and in the beyond, that beautiful country, in the beyond, which all good citizens of Idaho intend to migrate when crowded out by the teeming millions of the east who shall migrate to our fair state when they shall have become fully aware of the opportunities in this land of promise.

BROUGHT FAME AND HONOR TO UTAH, NOW IN TROUBLE.

only by the most recent models, which were supplied with recoil cylinders. With this equipment on hand, the infantry company was converted into battery A. N. G. U. Captain Grow remained in the infantry arm of the service. Lieutenant Webb became captain and Fred U. Leonard became second lieutenant. Lieutenant Kneass moved to Ogden and Lieutenant Marzetta resigned to accept a commission in the regular army. These changes resulted in the election as lieutenants of Fred Smith and George Worthen, both of whom, with Captain Webb, have recently resigned.

Battery A, at once sprang into popular favor, which naturally inclined to artillery organizations after the part Utah artillerymen took in the Philippine campaigns. The new battery drew heavily from the ranks of Philippine veterans and from among the Salt Lake High school graduates and its personnel was of the highest character.

Praised by Army Officer.

In November, 1903, battery A, with other guard organizations, was ordered into active service in Carbon county. The big guns were left behind, but the batterymen, equipped with Gatlings and side arms, went into camp at Sunnyside, where they remained eight weeks.

On April 12, 1904, the battery was inspected by Captain Sturgis of the regular army, in accordance with the new militia law. In his report, Captain Sturgis said, among other things: "Character, zeal, efficiency and reliability, excellent. Captain Webb is an excellent man and keeps everything in his organization up to a high standard. All the drill was exceedingly well done, but included no mounted movements. I think the organization is in about as good condition as is possible under existing conditions. Some instruction with horse has been given, and the organization is able to turn out fully equipped when horses are provided. Instruction is given in sighting, sub-caliber and range finding. Eight hours of target practice with 22 in. B. L. R. was had last summer in camp with the Twenty-second battery, field artillery; eight days in camp and four days on the march, distance marched 100 miles with Twenty-second battery.

"This organization was on duty at the coal strike as infantry. I believe this to be a very reliable and excellent militia organization. It is remarked that forty out of the total strength of forty-four were present at inspection." Captain George H. Jamerson of the Twenty-ninth United States infantry, who inspected the battery in camp in August, 1904, reported: "The battery picked its own tents on arrival and did it promptly and well."

From personal observations and inspections, I can heartily concur in the remarks contained in the last paragraph of Lieutenant Green's report to the effect that Captain Webb, commanding the Utah battery, is entitled to great credit for the high state of efficiency of his battery and the excellent condition of all equipment, and the books of the battery were better kept than those of any organization in camp and showed a good knowledge of record keeping."

At the encampment in Provo in 1904, the name of the battery was changed to First battery, Light artillery, N. G. U., the name it now bears.

Colonel Joseph Goodrich, acting adjutant general, announces his purpose of giving special attention to the battery in future with a view to restoring it to its former condition of excellence. Indeed, he declares his purpose of making it a better organization than ever before. This will naturally require time, because it will be necessary to work over much raw material, the veterans having quit in view of existing conditions.
